This proposal submitted for hangul letters RIEU LIEUL UEUB and BANMOEUM-I, which appears in “조선어 신철자법”. In my perspective, they should not be in Unicode. Following are my reasons.

First, all the hangul letters in Unicode are based on “훈민정음”, while they aren't. What's more, the Jungseong Jamos are all based on araea(天), eu(地) and i(人), however, BANMOEUM-I cannot be expressed.

Second, I remembered that these Jamos were once submitted but were withdrewed, though I didn't know the reason then.

Third, if these Jamos can be included in Unicode and, all the letters in the following picture of KIPA should also be in Unicode, for they have the same nature.

Fourth, in N2243, 혀바닥소리 Jamos in 《訓民正音圖解》 and 마름모 미음 in 《華東正音通釋韻考》 are also withdrawn. These letters' ages are much older than the ones in “조선어 신철자법”, but younger than “훈민정음”.

Fifth, the ones in “조선어 신철자법” are used for irregular forms of Verbs and Adjectives.

RIEU: This is used for the words which end with ㄹ. But all the words which end with ㄹ are all irregular, this new letter is unnecessary.

LIEUL: This is used for the words which end with ㄹ. Exactly, all the occasions “ㄹㄹ” appears can be replaced by LIEUL with no conflicts, in other words, it is just a simplification form of “ㄹㄹ”.

UEUB: This is used for the words which end with ㅄ, identical as KAPYEOUN-PIEUP(뽕).

For these reasons, these are exactly useless in Korean languages, more useless than the 혀바닥소리 Jamos (The initial consonants in Mid-age Chinese, in order to differentiate the 端透定泥-Group and the 知徹澄娘-Group).

Sixth, all the hangul jamos in Unicode now have their uses, in the passage of an old literature book, or still be used nowadays, but these ones in “조선어 신철자법” were already obsoleted by their inventors of 朝鮮語學會 in the second year they were invented. We can see the uselessness of them.
