

Title: Considerations on Mongolian Code Chart

Summary: This document is proposing an update of the Mongolian code charts according to findings in document N4884. This has no bearing on the overall discussion concerning the Mongolian encoding model. The main goal is to ensure the most accurate representation of the current encoding of the Mongolian block.

The document N4884 'Positional Mismatches in Mongolian Encoding' contains in Appendix A contains a 'Full chart of the Mongolian variant specifications in TUS without editorial errors. That chart aims at representing the Mongolian code chart as intended (minus the newly proposed U+1878), including positional shapes and FVS variants. The differences between N4884 and the current Mongolian code charts in both Unicode 10.0 and the PDAM1.3 code charts are mainly classified in the following three categories:

- Treatment of isolates: N4884 does not always specify isolate forms, because they may not exist in Mongolian. On the other side, the expectation of the Unicode code chart was that the representative glyph was the isolate first form unless it was mentioned explicitly in the list of positional forms. The representative glyph is the glyph shown on the same line as the character name (and in the cells of the initial pages showing the glyphs in tabular format).
- Positional forms missing in the Unicode code charts. These charts are missing some isolate forms, therefore giving the incorrect impression that the current representative glyphs are the isolate forms.
- Unattested position forms presented in the Unicode code charts. According to N4884, any empty cell in the table presented in its Appendix A represented unattested position forms (isolate, initial, medial, or final). For some characters, there are no positional forms presented at all. For others, only some are missing. On the other hand, the Unicode code charts tend to present a fully populated positional context because inherently there is no restriction in what can be created by a user, even if it does not make sense from an orthography point of view.

To address these issues, the author suggests modifying the Mongolian Unicode code charts in the following manners:

- 1) Explicitly state that unless mentioned explicitly, for any code point entry containing position forms, the representative glyph for the isolated first form is undefined,
- 2) Add the missing isolate first forms as specified by N4884,
- 3) When a code point has no positional forms in N4884, remove these in the code charts, this does not fully define the representative glyph for the isolated first form if any.
- 4) When a code point has no isolate first form in N4884, it will be implied by the above item 1 that the isolate first form is undefined. This can be modified in the future once the preferred isolate first forms are defined for additional Mongolian code points.
- 5) When a code point has some missing position forms other than isolate first form, it is suggested to use a generic symbol showing unattested, something like U+22A0 ☒. Once attestation or preferred practice is found, these positions can be populated by the appropriate glyph(s).

- 6) It is possible that some code points that have no position forms shown based on the item 3 above will be shown with such forms in the future, if evidences are found.

The following pages show a prototype of the modified Mongolian code charts per amendment 1.3 and the modification suggested above and can be the candidate representation for ISO/IEC 10646:2016 Amendment 1 and Unicode version 11.0.
