This proposal presents a new block of 1376 Jurchen characters and 49 Jurchen radicals. The characters are divided into 38 groups in terms of same radicals. These radicals are listed in the front of each group. The characters in this collection are basically referring to The Jurchen Characters Dictionary (《女真文辞典》) edited by Jin Qizong(金启宗), while the characters in the dictionary are from Nvzhen Yiyu (《女真译语》) and various Jurchen stele inscriptions.

Jin Kingdom(金朝) was established by Wanyan Aguda(完颜阿骨打) in 1115, which co-existed with Nan Song(南宋) and Tangut (西夏) Kingdom in history. Conquered by the Mongols in 1234, there were 9 emperors in total, spanning 119 years.

Jurchen Language was the ancestor of Manchu language. According to the History of the Jin Dynasty, “the Jurchen originally had no written characters. When the State became flourishing and gradually extended its boundaries, and it entered into relations with neighbouring Countries, the khitan script was used by them. Afterwards, Xiyin was commissioned by the emperor Taizu to make a national script, with rules for its composition. Xiyin, thereupon, coping the strokes of the ordinary Chinese characters, and following the rules of composition of the Khitan large script, made the new Jurchen characters, adapted to express the words of the national language. In the eighth month of the third year of the Tianfu period (天辅三年, 1119), the composition of the new script was finished. Taizu, greatly pleased, ordered it to be distributed throughout the state, and presented to Xiyin a caparisoned horse and a suit of court robes. Afterwards, when the emperor Xizong(1135-1148) composed another set of Jurchen characters, they were used together with the script made by Xiyin; the characters composed by Xiyin were called the Jurchen large characters, and those made by Xizong were called the Jurchen small characters.”

It was recorded that there were two sets of scripts in Jin dynasty, that is, the Jurchen large script(女真大字) and the Jurchen small script(女真小字). It was considered that the Jurchen large characters created by Wanyan Xiyin(完颜希尹) were ideographic, whereas the Jurchen small characters created by Jin Xizong(金熙宗), which were purely phonetic ones, express grammatical terminations. In the course of time, a number of ideographic graphs were acquired a syllabo-phonetic function and eventually used for purely phonetic ones, so the script we see in the Jin Dynasty inscriptions such as Nvzhen jinshi timing bei inscription or the Ming Dynasty Jurchen-Chinese glossary was ideograph-phonetic script.

Both Khitan script and Chinese characters played important parts in Jin dynasty, and the Jurchen script was not widely used. Because of that, there were only a few Jurchen writings found so far. There are mainly three types of Jurchen writings remained nowadays, which are stele inscriptions, literary works and ink marks on boards. There are 10 Jurchen stele inscriptions in total, among which Dajin deshengtuo song bei(大金得胜陀颂碑) is the biggest in content.

There are very few Jurchen writings left in the world, so we still don't know the total number of Jurchen characters. In order to finish the book The Jurchen Characters Dictionary(《女真文辞典》) consisting 1376 characters, the author Jin Qizong (金启宗) searched all around for the Jurchen stele inscriptions and literary works, which are as follows:

Dajin deshengtuo song bei (大金得胜陀颂碑): carved in 1185, found in the suburb of a small village in Jilin Province, consisting of more than 1500 Jurchen characters, which is so far the largest number.

Nvzhen jinshi timing bei(女真进士题名碑): carved in 1224, consisting of more than 1100 characters, found in Henan Province.

Aotun liangbi shi bei(奥屯良弼诗碑): there was a line of regular script on both the top and bottom side of the stele, the body was made of 11 lines, consisting of more than 100 characters, it's the only Jurchen carvings in running hand.

Qingyuanjun Nvzhen guoshu bei(庆源郡女真国书碑): in memory of contributions to building up the temple, found in North Korea, only the bottom half of the stele remained.

Nuergan yongning si bei(奴儿干永宁寺碑): built in 1413, front side were in Chinese, back side were in Jurchen and Mongol script, each 15 lines, about 700 Jurchen characters.

Aotun liangbi jianyin bei(奥屯良弼钱饮碑): the body part were in Chinese, written by Aotun Liang Bi in 1206. there were 3 lines of Jurchen script on the left side of the stele, which were written by Bu Xiuhong(卜修洪) in 1210.

Zhaoyong dajiangjun tongzhi xiongzhou jiedushi mubei(昭勇大将军同知雄州节度使墓碑): carved in 1186, found in Wanyan Xiyin's burial ground in Jilin Province in 1979.

Beiqing Nvzhen guoshu moya(北青女真国书摩崖): carved in 1218, found in North Korea, 5 lines of Jurchen script, consisting of more than 40 characters.

Hailong Nvzhen guoshu moya(海龙女真国书摩崖): including two places, one with both Chinese and Jurchen script, while the other with only Jurchen script.

Fragments from Xi'an Beilin: found in Xi'an Beilin in 1973, 11 pieces in total, consisting of 237 lines and more than 2300 Jurchen characters.

Fragments preserved in St. Petersburg: dated the late time of Jin dynasty, discovered by Kychanov, there are three pieces of Jurchen script in cursive hand.

Nv Zhen Yi Yu(《女真译语》) edited by Siyiguan(四夷馆) in Ming dynasty.

After The Jurchen Characters Dictionary(《女真文辞典》) was published, the Jiufeng shibi jigong bei(九峰石壁纪功碑) was found in Mongolia, which carved in 1196, consisting of more than 140 characters, recording one important war during the reign of Jin Zhangzong(金章宗).

Jiufeng shibi jigong stele(九峰石壁纪功碑)

The Jurchen script is one of the few ancient scripts that don't have a universal inputting system. The computer-inputting problem not being solved means that the Jurchen-related works cannot get typeset, which no doubt discourages researcher's passion towards work. On Nov. 2008, Prof. Kane show us a system made by Jason Glavy, we sign it as Y- and list them in the tables.

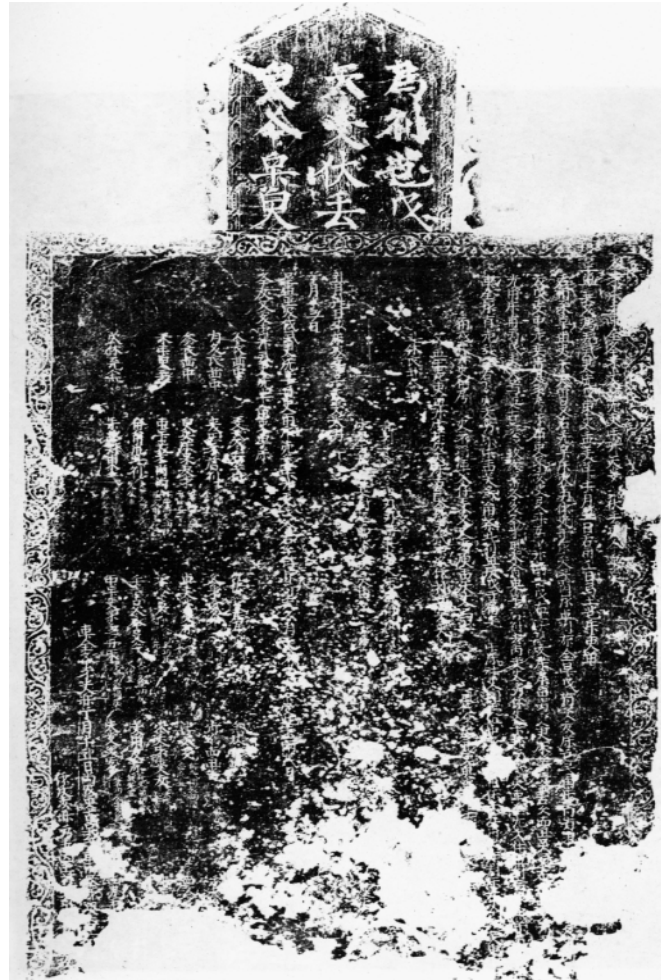

Like Chinese characters, there were three types of Jurchen scripts popular in Jin dynasty, which were regular script(楷书), running hand(行书) and cursive hand(草书). The Jurchen script was created on the basis of regular script of Chinese characters, and therefore regular script was the official script of Jurchen writings.

Most of the Jurchen stele inscriptions and literary works preserved today are in regular script. Therefore, the future Jurchen database for encoding should be in regular script, of which each character should be from the original Jurchen material rather than recent copies. There exists no complete carved version of Jurchen dictionary today. Nv Zhen Yi Yu in Ming dynasty is complete, but it was in manuscript version, so it's difficult to identify whether the characters are in regular script or in running hand. Besides, the very few stele inscriptions are scattered and blurred. When The Jurchen Characters Dictionary(《女真文辞典》) by Jin Qizong was published, the publishing conditions were limited and the publishing house was not able to make character models, so it used the handwriting of Mr. Jin's, which makes the other Jurchen scripts besides Mr. Jin's unavailable when we look up in the dictionary. (The Jurchen Characters Dictionary is considered an authoritative dictionary for the author's excellent work of explaining the Jurchen characters.) Due to the above reason, we had to make some regulations to characters from the Jurchen Characters Dictionary when establishing the Jurchen database, for example, by means of consulting the Chinese regular script and Nvzhen jinshi timing bei(女真进士题名碑) in which the characters are comparatively tidy and clear. We hope the Jurchen script will look more original in this way.

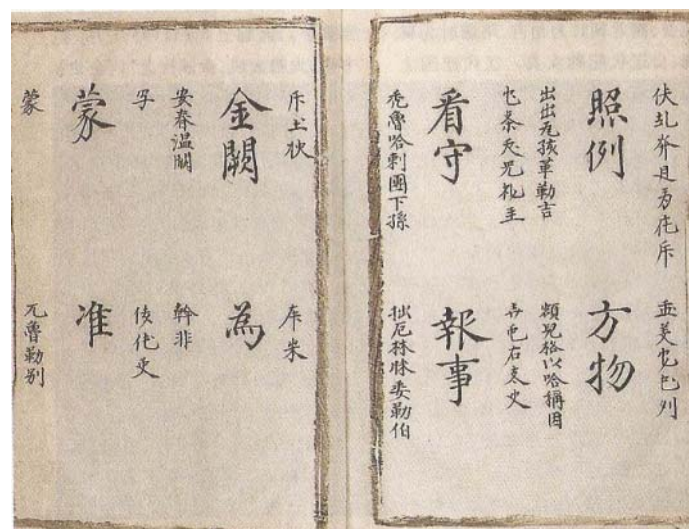

The Jurchen characters in this proposal are ordered on 49 radicals (38 in major and 11 attached), while radicals are ordered on their strokes. All characters can not be named for the reason that they are ideographs. It is estimated that probably found characters and radicals in future will be less than 100.

Actually there is only one sort of Jurchen script discovered. Debates exists on whether the Jurchen small script made by Jin Xizong is a sort of independent script from the beginning. Some people consider that Jin Xizaong only made some grammartical elements to change the function of expression of Jurchen Large Script. This proposal contains all characters found in exsiting Jurchen stele inscriptions.
