1. Background

The “Chinese Ideograms Coded Character Set for Information Interchange” (also translated “Code of Chinese Ideogram Set for Information Interchange”) is defined by a series of standards from Mainland China. It comprises at minimum the following parts, each of which defines a 94×94-position charset plane compatible with ISO/IEC-2022 (although only the “Basic Set” has an ISO-IR registration):

- GB/T-2312: the “Basic Set”—Unihan Database G0 or kGB0
- GB/T-12345: the “Supplementary Set”—Unihan Database G1 or kGB1
- GB/T-7589: the “2nd Supplementary Set”
- GB/T-13131 (unpublished): the “3rd Supplementary Set”—Unihan Database G3 or kGB3
- GB/T-7590: the “4th Supplementary Set”
- GB/T-13132 (unpublished): the “5th Supplementary Set”—Unihan Database G5 or kGB5
- GB/T-16500: the “7th Supplementary Set”—Unihan Database GE (not G7); see IRGN2297
- SJ/T-11239: the “8th Supplementary Set”—see IRGN2784 (not Unihan Database G8)

GB2312 covers a core set of Simplified Chinese characters. GB12345 covers the Traditional Chinese counterparts in a largely homologous layout, but needing some additional allocations due to the existence of distinct Traditional characters with the same Simplified form. Less-common characters are in GB7589, while even-less-common characters are in GB7590; GB13131 and GB13132 cover their Traditional counterparts. GB16500 covers the remainder of the characters from the original Unicode 1.1 CJK block (which are thus present in all versions of GBK). SJ11239 covers otherwise-rare characters required to spell certain place-names.

※ It is unclear to the author of this document what, if anything, the “6th Supplementary Set” is: one possibility would be GB/T-12052 (Unihan Database GK, covering Korean letters, syllables and gukja), while another possibility is a hypothetical Simplified Chinese counterpart to GB16500. It probably does not refer to GB/T-6345.1, GB/T-8565.2 (Unihan Database G8), nor GB/T-15564 (Unihan Database GH), since these define additions to the “Basic Set” charset plane as opposed to separate charset planes. It also does not refer to the G7 source, which is treated as a 94×94-position charset plane as a source-reference convention, but is not so-arranged in the original document (see discussion in IRGN2808r).

The Unihan Database uses two formats for codepoints from these charset planes. The kIRG_GSource property uses hexadecimal GL (two concatenated hexadecimal numbers between 0x21 and 0x7E). The kGB0, kGB1, kGB3 and kGB5 properties use decimal row-cell (two concatenated decimal numbers between 01 and 94). To convert, add or subtract 0x20 (32).

The kGB0, kGB1, kGB3 and kGB5 properties are some of the longest-standing properties in the Unihan Database: their tables in UAX#38 § 4.1 give their introduction version as “2.0”, but they do not appear in the list of properties introduced in Unicode 2.0 in UAX#38 § 4.2, since they are amongst the properties converted from the original Unicode 1.1.5 multi-column CJKXREF.TXT. For comparison, the `kIRG_GSource` property was introduced in Unicode 3.0.

Also introduced in Unicode 3.0 was the CJK Unified Ideographs Extension A block, which significantly improved the Unicode coverage of GB13131 and GB13132. While the “Basic Set” (GB2312) was included in its entirety in the Unified Repertoire and Ordering as one of the source-separation authorities, GB13131 was included partly in the URO and partly in CJK Extension A, and the GB13132 repertoire is not fully included in the Basic Multilingual Plane at all, although the portion that is was included partly in the URO and partly in CJK Extension A.

However, nearly all of the characters with a `kGB3` or `kGB5` property value are in the URO, while there exist many CJK Extension A characters with a `kIRG_GSource` value prefixed with `G3-` or `G5-` which, nonetheless, have no `kGB3` or `kGB5` property. In other words, after the `kIRG_GSource` property was introduced shortly prior to the introduction of CJK Extension A, the `kGB3` and `kGB5` properties seem to have received relatively few updates.

As the author recently highlighted in PRI feedback (see UTC L2/25-090 § 3), the `kGB3` and `kGB5` properties would ideally represent a strict superset of the data provided by the `G3-` and `G5-` source references, similarly to the relationship of `kGB1` (with or without `kPseudoGB1`) to the `G1-` source references. This is especially true for `kGB5`, since most of the remaining GB13132 characters have been added to Unicode in subsequent versions, but with other source references, such as references to standard-reference-work Chinese dictionaries. This contrasts with the removed `kKSC1` property, where the entire hanja section of KS-X-1002 is covered by `K1-` source references in `kIRG_KSource` (and is expected to remain so for the foreseeable future).

As advised in UTC L2/25-090 § 3, this proposal has been prepared.

2. Characters with G3 or G5 sources

The following characters have G3 or G5 source references in `kIRG_GSource`, but no `kGB3` or `kGB5` value (respectively). Since `kIRG_GSource` is a normative property, while `kGB3` and `kGB5` are provisional, the author of this document presumes that copying data from the former to the latter (subject to conversion of the ISO/IEC-2022 codepoint representation from hexadecimal GL to decimal row-cell) would be uncontroversial. This may be considered the principal part of this proposal, in response to the UTC L2/25-o9o § 3 response to the author's PRI feedback.

These are all CJK Extension A characters (since the URO characters with G3 or G5 source references already have `kGB3` or `kGB5` values, and G3 and G5 source references were not used for CJK Extension B onwards). They comprise roughly half of the codepoints listed in this document, and nearly all the `kGB3` values listed in this document.

3. Other characters

A number of other characters for which a `kGB3` or `kGB5` property value may be applicable are listed below in three categories, ordered from least to most potentially controversial. It is provided in the hope that it proves useful to include, although the author accepts that it is less likely to be accepted for inclusion than the data in section 2.

Although it would complete the coverage of those two provisional properties (excluding unencoded characters), this data was prepared by the author of this document, and may contain errors. It also assumes that `GB13131` and `GB13132` are homologous to `GB7589` and `GB7590`, except for the three small regions where they apparently are not (see section 3.3 below) which, given the available data and absent any published `GB13131` or `GB13132`, is likely but impossible to confirm.

This data was mainly worked on between November 2024 and January 2025 by the author of this document—a glimpse of the process can be viewed in the VCS history of their `ecma35lib` project.¹ For the purpose of looking up the characters involved, the author of this document developed a lookup system relying mostly on data from Andrew “BabelStone” West’s excellent IDS.TXT, for which they are exceedingly grateful. For a small minority of characters (fewer than 70 in total), citations to `GB7589` or `GB7590` from the list of variation sequences implemented by the BabelStone Han font (BSH_IVS) were referenced either directly or as a starting point.

3.1. GB7589 and GB7590 characters which may be unchanged in GB13131 or GB13132

The following are `GB7589` or `GB7590` characters without a `G3` or `G5` source reference which do not have a singular `kTraditionalVariant` property value, and do not fall within the three nonhomologous ranges (as discussed in section 3.3 below). As such, they might be presumed to be the same in `GB13131` and `GB13132` as they are in `GB7589` or `GB7590` (respectively).

Not all, but the overwhelming majority of, these characters are `GB13132` characters found in CJK Extension B, for which `GB13131` and `GB13132` were not used for source references (in contrast to both the URO and CJK Extension A, for which they were).

`U+5570` 嚙 is a special case, since it has two `kTraditionalVariant` values (as both a simplification, and a Traditional character in its own right). Additionally, some of the characters (mostly in CJK Extension C and up) are Simplified Chinese characters which lack a `kTraditionalVariant` property: presumably, only the Simplified form has been proposed with sufficient evidence. Both of these cases are marked with an asterisk where obvious.

3.2. Traditional Chinese equivalents of GB7589 or GB7590 characters

The following are Traditional Chinese equivalents of characters from GB7589 or GB7590 (excluding those with G3 or G5 sources, those with existing kGB3 or kGB5 properties, and those from the three nonhomologous ranges discussed in section 3.3 below).

Again, the overwhelming majority of these are found in CJK Extension B. Additionally, with the sole exception of U+5829 塏, these are otherwise all additions to kGB5 as opposed to kGB3.

3.3. Nonhomologous GB13131 and GB13132 regions

Three ranges within the unpublished GB13131 and GB13132 referenced by IRG source references appear, as an exception, not to be homologous with the published versions of GB7589 and GB7590. This was highlighted in IRGN2302 as a potential error, but was apparently deemed correct per IRGN2376. Note that the range shown for the second GB7590 nonhomologous region in IRGN2302 (within row 74) is too narrow: 73-93 and 73-94 are also affected. In summary:

- GB7589 includes U+201b5 𠄎 in position 16-65, and does not include U+4f47 𠄎, presumably because it is already included in GB12345. GB13131 apparently includes U+511c 𠄎 in position 16-83, and does not include U+201b5 𠄎. The GB13131 characters in between these positions are apparently shifted back by one position relative to GB7589.
- GB7590 positions 67-12 through 67-25 (at narrowest), or positions 67-11 through 67-26 (at widest) appear to be shifted back by one position in GB13132 (e.g. U+7b40 𠄎, GB7590 67-12, is apparently GB13132 67-11). Insufficient information is available to ascertain more about this nonhomologous region (e.g., there is no IRG source reference that attests to any GB13132 character without a GB7590 equivalent at GB13132 position 67-25 or 67-26).
- GB13132 apparently includes U+8575 𠄎 in position 73-93. GB7590 does not include U+8575 𠄎 at all, although it does include the visually similar U+859e 𠄎 at position 74-18. The GB7590 range from position 73-93 to either 74-14 (narrowest), 74-18 (widest), or 74-17 (most probable given the above), appears to be shifted forward by one position in GB13132.

The affected reconstructed GB13132 characters with neither G5 sources nor existing kGB5 properties are shown below; the circumstances surrounding them might need national-body clarification before they can be confidently deemed correct. A precautionary approach would exclude them. Values with a lower degree of confidence (i.e. which do not appear between characters which are known to be shifted) are marked with an asterisk.

4. Appendix: Recent corrections to kGB3, kGB5, and/or G3 or G5 source references

For ease of reference, some previously-proposed amendments to the GB13131 or GB13132 data in the Unihan Database, where the unamended values were present in Unicode 15.1, are listed below. No action is proposed in relation to them. An odd one out is IRGN2297, since the kGB5 property of U+6a69 remains in the database. Since U+6a69 and U+23727 are indeed variants of one another, no action is proposed here; however, it is also listed here for completeness.

For compactness, the value is given in source-reference format even where the correction in question concerned only the kGB3 or kGB5 property.
