Introduction.

Providing Ideographic Description Sequence (IDS) for ideographs is an effective method for identifying ideographs. As of it, IRG PnP [1] requires the proposers of ideographs to provide the IDS data along with ideographs. However, some ideographs contain the component that is not encoded as an independent ideograph. To cope with this problem, the one might use other mean to specify unencoded component, such as private characters or entity references.

This document is a response to IRG M39.9 2. This document describes the CDP glyphs used in IDS database [3] as an “alternate” for unencoded component, and propose several ways to handle unencoded components in the IDS.

CDP glyphs in IDS data

Attached glyph list shows the list of glyphs used in the IDS data ^[2] that are used in IDS data ^[3]. These glyphs are taken from EUDC (End User Defined Characters) font provided from Chinese Document Processing (CDP) Laboratory of Academia Sinica (<http://cdp.sinica.edu.tw/>). They are denoted as ‘&CDP-XXXX;’ (an entity reference style notation) in IDS data ³, that is a practice of CHISE Project (<http://www.chise.org/>), where original IDS data is created and distributed.

Glyphs provided by CDP Laboratory are for the specific research purpose, and they may not be suitable for standardization. Repertoire of CDP glyphs sometimes fulfills the unencoded components for IDS, but not always.

Limitations and Restrictions of IDS

It should be noted that the IDS is useful, but not versatile, for identification of ideographs. IDS is ambiguous notation, and mere comparison of IDS does not guarantee that proposed ideographs is not duplicated with encoded ideographs.

However, we may consider and formalize a way to encode IDS with unencoded components so that it would help people to find possibly duplicate ideograph in easier mannar.

Proposal

For providing the IDS for ideograph with unencoded component, some methods may be considered.

1. Use of “◆ (U+FFFD)” REPLACEMENT character as a wildcard for unencoded component.

When the one cannot find the appropriate encoded DC for specific IDS, he or she may use REPLACEMENT character (U+FFFD) instead. IDS check system may pick up the possible candidates for that REPLACEMENT character part. (Basically, such ideograph should be checked by eye-balls.)

2. Use of CHISE-style entity reference

If the one found the unencoded component in attached CDP glyph list, then the one may also use ‘&CDP-XXXX;’ notation for that part, as used in the IDS data. That would achieve a better matching, but eye-ball checking would still be needed.

3. Any better alternate?

If REPLACEMENT character “◆” is too vague as wildcard character, we might consider any alternate method. For example, we may consider to use “① (circle digit one)” to “③⑩ (circled digit 30)” for unencoded components with that number of stroke. This may provide a better searching/matching against encoded ideographs.

I appreciate if IRG members could discuss this issue in constructive mannar.
